Message from Cabinet Secretary Veronica N. Gonzales

As Governor Martinez’ first term concludes, I look back over my four years with the department with awe, pleasure, pride and determination. Awe - because the breadth of the Department of Cultural Affairs’ (DCA’s) programs and services is so wide, reaching so many diverse constituencies, and because the passion of DCA’s staff and of our advocates across New Mexico is so strong. Pleasure - because I have the opportunity to be part of so many exciting adventures. Pride - because our department is now stable, and while challenges still remain, we are better able to focus on mission instead of crisis management. Determination - to make a difference; to continue to bring high quality programs to New Mexicans in every county; and to position New Mexico as a leader in its support of the arts and cultural industries.

Here are some of DCA’s more noteworthy accomplishments during FY 2014:

- At the Museum of Natural History and Science in Albuquerque, this year’s attendance was 293,445, the highest in 8 years. USA Today named our museum the third best family museum in North America. The museum was also recently accepted as a Smithsonian Affiliate.

- At our Space History Museum, where attendance had fallen from a high twenty years ago of over 200,000 to a low of 74,000, our improvements are already starting to make a difference. Visitation in 2013 was up 10% from the low in Fiscal Year 2012, and attendance during the most recent quarter was up 40.3% from last year.

- New Mexico Arts partnered with the Navajo Nation and Chinese dissident artist Ai Weiwei on a public art project. The project, “Pull of the Moon”, was installed in a remote area of Coyote Canyon on the Navajo reservation. “Pull of the Moon” included temporary sand renderings and bonfires by Ai Weiwei and Navajo artist Bert Benally captured on an interactive 3-D film. The film’s July opening occurred in a full immersion video dome on Museum Hill in Santa Fe. “Pull of the Moon” signifies the transformative power of art through international collaboration. It is a reminder of the immense challenges faced by many cultures and the capacity for growth and healing derived from the very impactful experience of those challenges.

- Our New Mexico Museum of Art was the only venue within the United States for the touring exhibition “Renaissance to Goya: Prints and Drawings from Spain”. The exhibition drew record crowds, quadrupling our usual attendance.

- Our State Library has partnered with a number of organizations to create “The Maker State” initiative. “Maker State” is an innovative program engaging all public libraries across New Mexico. The goal of the program is to excite New Mexico communities about science, technology, engineering, art, and math (STEAM) – fostering creativity and academic excellence – to prepare our children, minorities, women, and under-represented populations for the technological fields of the future. Over 1,000 New Mexicans have participated thus far.

- Our Historic Preservation Division issued 35 project grants, stimulating $873,400 in historic preservation activity - in communities as large as Albuquerque and as small as Lordsburg. The historic Santo Domingo Trading Post is open for the first time in more than 10 years. Crumbling masonry walls at a significant Chaco Pueblo site in northwestern New Mexico were stabilized this summer. Silver City will once again have a movie theater. These are only some of the Division's wide-ranging accomplishments.

- Our National Hispanic Cultural Center (NHCC) Art Museum doubled its attendance in June and July of 2014, when compared to the same time period in 2013. NHCC also sold out seven performances in a row in the Journal Theater (691 seats) during the summer of 2014, for the first time since 2006!

- Our New Mexico Historic Sites are in their second year of participating in “Stories from the Land”. The program partners with libraries, museums, art and archaeological organizations, and various government agencies at the state, local, and tribal levels. The shared goal is to foster the development of increased reading and writing skills in our New Mexico children - through visits and educational experiences at our state historic sites. As an example, in July 2014, children from Jemez Pueblo traveled to our Jemez Historic Site to participate in a week of hands on learning activities.

- Our New Mexico History Museum, which opened in May 2009, surpassed 500,000 visitors on December 4, 2013 - six months prior to reaching its fifth anniversary.

In August 2014, Department of Cultural Affairs (DCA) released the results of a study commissioned by DCA from the Bureau of Business and Economic Research (BBER) of the University of New Mexico - examining the impact of the arts and culture industry in New Mexico. The BBER report found that cultural resources across New Mexico have a $5.6 billion dollar impact on the state's economy. Cultural resources are responsible for the employment of 76,000 New Mexicans, providing 1 of every 10 jobs in the state (more jobs than the state’s construction and manufacturing industries combined). Of key importance to DCA is that the report states that a strong cultural community is not an OUTCOME of a strong economy, but instead, is a necessary PRE-CONDITION to a strong, successful, thriving, and ever-expanding New Mexico economy.

A key recommendation of the BBER report - and an area where DCA is committed to exhibiting leadership - is in strengthening the cohesion of the arts and cultural industry. DCA will work toward the formation of a successful statewide cultural network, which increases essential business access and strengthens support for individuals working in the creative industries. This network will connect individuals, organizations, and businesses in the arts and cultural industry - creating new relationships, partnerships, and resource leveraging statewide.

DCA will also work to promote an arts and cultural track in business incubation, and seek ways to connect with emerging creative business incubators in our communities. Business incubation is an effective tool for economic growth - especially if we want to create and expand the "hive" model - by investing in homegrown, creative entrepreneurs. DCA will encourage business incubators, and the emerging businesses they nurture, to play a more significant role as we work to strengthen the arts and cultural industries.

DCA – with other state agencies such as the Economic Development Department – currently manages programs that support the role of arts and culture in communities. Examples include the DCA’s New Mexico Arts Grant Program, the Public Art Program, and partnerships with Economic Development in the Mainstreet Program and the Arts & Cultural Districts program. We are very dedicated to the success of these programs and one of our goals moving forward is to invest more deeply in them.

The BBER report offers 12 recommendations for making New Mexico more competitive in the global market. The recommendations challenge government, non-profit organizations, and the business sector to work together toward this common goal. As Secretary of Cultural Affairs, I am committed to such partnerships. Working together, we can strengthen our cultural communities and our state.

By very definition, planning is looking forward not back, yet the tremendous accomplishments of DCA in the past four years must be applauded. I am very grateful for the Department’s professional, dedicated, and hard-working staff and the support of our Governor, Susana Martinez, and the New Mexico State Legislature. Without all three, these accomplishments would not have been possible.

Executive Summary and Strategic Planning Process

The Department of Cultural Affairs oversees fifteen Divisions committed to collectively serving as the cultural steward of the state’s patrimony. Over one million people visit DCA’s museums and historic sites or participate in DCA’s educational programs each year.

DCA’s Strategic Plan is a result of an extensive listening tour throughout New Mexico conducted by Secretary Gonzales, and informed by the findings recently released in an economic impact study conducted by the Bureau of Business and Economic Research (BBER) at the University of New Mexico. In addition, Secretary Gonzales has met with nearly 500 staff members from all fifteen DCA divisions located around the state, and heard firsthand the challenges and successes they encounter on a daily basis.

The community gatherings included local leaders in arts and cultural industries as well as civic, educational, and private sector leaders. Throughout her administration, Secretary Gonzales has continued the conversation, visiting DCA facilities statewide, holding quarterly meetings with senior leadership staff and regular meetings with individual Division Directors, in which ideas, strategies, and policies are discussed, and from which the strategic direction for DCA has taken shape.

The goals and objectives are closely aligned with the Governor’s focus on education, the economy, and rebuilding public trust through stewardship, accountability, effective and responsible resource management, and transparency in government. In addition, the plan focuses on specific goals emerging from the BBER study findings, building a common agenda for the arts and cultural industry and raising the profile of New Mexico as a cultural state.

During FY 14 DCA has continued to make significant progress towards achievement of the goals, completing many action steps, making progress on recent objectives and developing newer objectives to reflect the changing environment in which we operate.
DCA’s Strategic Goals are:

- Maximize Impact of Programs and Services across New Mexico. Internal and external collaborations throughout the department have created momentum towards maximizing the impact of DCA’s programs and services. A position in the Secretary’s office has been created to focus specifically on building partnerships and development, including funding partnerships and building other external relationships.

- Strengthen Arts & Cultural Industries across NM. In August 2014, DCA released a newly completed economic impact report conducted by UNM’s Bureau of Business and Economic Research. In addition to impacting DCA’s strategic goals, the report should serve as a catalyst for local community governments and arts organizations to strengthen local cultural resources and a statewide network in order to achieve successful economic development in their communities.

- Build Cohesive Messaging and Branding across DCA. Significant progress has been made to improve marketing, messaging and branding throughout the department, through successful establishment of a cross-divisional marketing team which is developing a department-wide marketing plan. The newly released BBER economic impact study underscores the need for New Mexico’s entire cultural community to build recognition of the impact of the cultural industry on New Mexico’s economy and livelihood. Additionally, DCA continues to pursue the use of new and enhanced technologies as well as the integration of new media in marketing, programs and services.

- Improve Service Delivery, Efficiency and Accountability. DCA is committed to improving and streamlining administrative and management practices to improve performance. In the area of human resources, the department has made numerous reclassifications to address pay inequities in similar positions across the department. Many vacancies have been filled from within, moving staff into more advanced classifications. Service capacity has been assessed and vacant positions reassigned to fill areas of most critical need, where statutory obligations were not being met or services to the public were inadequate. In the Arts Program, an additional position is being assigned to expedite implementation of Art in Public Places (AIPP) projects, which will enable DCA to complete an additional million dollars in AIPP projects each year, to meet the needs of this statutorily mandated program. Information technology systems are being developed to expedite and provide greater accountability in the AIPP program, HR hiring process, and Facilities management, including condition assessment, prioritization, and implementation. DCA is updating the policies and procedures manual to provide greater clarity to expedite management across the department. And lastly, DCA is seeking to rebuild and institutionalize a stable funding stream for both operating and capital programs.
